

Quite often the public gets to know a famous person in history through the personal diaries and memories he or she left us, after leaving this world. In spite of biographies, these personal accounts, originally written for personal reference and use only, are the best way to discover the real personality of the author. Many characters of the Great War make no exception and, in the course of almost one century, a large number of diaries and similar publications have reached a bigger and bigger audience throughout the world. Nonetheless, most of these books have originated from the memories of war veterans and occasional research, while the personal diary of Settimio Damiani has a sensibly greater and most exclusive value for us.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL DETAILS

Authors: Alessandro Gualtieri – Giovanni Dalle Fusine

Translated by Alessandro Gualtieri

Paperback: 144 pages (also pdf edition available)

Publish: February 2009

ISBN: 9788895994048